HOLLANDBIO MEMBERSHIP

Hollandbio is a privately funded association. Any company[1] involved in biotechnology can become a member of hollandbio: both companies that apply biotech and organizations that provide supporting services. To determine the membership rate, hollandbio distinguishes between three types of members[2]: biotech, biotech-as-a-service, and business.

MEMBER CATEGORIES

- Biotech members use biological systems and processes to develop new technologies or products. They conduct research, test the feasibility of their innovations, and work on scaling up towards market introduction. Their activities contribute to finding smart solutions for societal challenges, such as in the fields of health, nutrition, agriculture, industry, or the environment.

- Biotech-as-a-service members provide specialized, supportive products and services that directly contribute to biotech innovation. They work on behalf of biotech companies to develop, test, and commercialize biotech applications and possess in-depth knowledge of biotech processes, regulations, and market introduction.

- Business members provide services that support organizations within and outside the biotech sector in their strategic and operational processes. Their services are aimed at optimizing business operations and achieving business objectives.
